Robert Brown is driving his 9-year old son David to school. Traffic is heavy this morning. Suddenly, tyres screech and another car bumps full speed into the right side of Robert's car. Both Robert and his son, severly injured, lose consciousness. An ambulance brings them to the hospital, where David, who needs to be operated immediately, is taken to the emergency room. But when the medical team arrives, the surgeon in charge suddenly stops short and says in a trembling voice: "I can't do this operation. This is my son!"

How is this possible?
